[529] 1. Soṇakajātakavaṇṇanā

Kassa sutvā sataṃ dammīti idaṃ satthā jetavane viharanto nekkhammapāramiṃ ārabbha kathesi. Tadā hi bhagavā dhammasabhāyaṃ nekkhammapāramiṃ vaṇṇayantānaṃ bhikkhūnaṃ majjhe nisīditvā ‘‘na, bhikkhave, idāneva, pubbepi tathāgato mahābhinikkhamanaṃ nikkhantoyevā’’ti vatvā atītaṃ āhari.

Atīte rājagahe magadharājā nāma rajjaṃ kāresi. Bodhisatto tassa aggamahesiyā kucchismiṃ nibbatti, nāmaggahaṇadivase cassa ‘‘arindamakumāro’’ti nāmaṃ kariṃsu. Tassa jātadivaseyeva purohitassapi putto jāyi, ‘‘soṇakakumāro’’tissa nāmaṃ kariṃsu. Te ubhopi ekatova vaḍḍhitvā vayappattā uttamarūpadharā rūpena nibbisesā hutvā takkasilaṃ gantvā uggahitasippā tato nikkhamitvā ‘‘sabbasamayasippañca desacārittañca jānissāmā’’ti anupubbena cārikaṃ carantā bārāṇasiṃ patvā rājuyyāne vasitvā punadivase nagaraṃ pavisiṃsu. Taṃ divasañca ekacce manussā ‘‘brāhmaṇavācanakaṃ karissāmā’’ti pāyāsaṃ paṭiyādetvā āsanāni paññāpetvā āgacchante te kumāre disvā gharaṃ pavesetvā paññattāsane nisīdāpesuṃ. Tattha bodhisattassa paññattāsane suddhavatthaṃ atthataṃ ahosi, soṇakassa rattakambalaṃ. So taṃ nimittaṃ disvāva ‘‘ajja me piyasahāyo arindamakumāro bārāṇasirājā bhavissati, mayhaṃ pana senāpatiṭṭhānaṃ dassatī’’ti aññāsi. Te ubhopi katabhattakiccā uyyānameva agamaṃsu.

Tadā bārāṇasirañño kālakatassa sattamo divaso hoti, aputtakaṃ rājakulaṃ. Amaccādayo pātova sasīsaṃ nhātā sannipatitvā ‘‘rajjārahassa santikaṃ gamissatī’’ti phussarathaṃ yojetvā vissajjesuṃ. So nagarā nikkhamitvā anupubbena rājuyyānaṃ gantvā uyyānadvāre nivattitvā ārohaṇasajjo hutvā aṭṭhāsi. Bodhisatto maṅgalasilāpaṭṭesasīsaṃ pārupitvā nipajji, soṇakakumāro tassa santike nisīdi. So tūriyasaddaṃ sutvā ‘‘arindamassa phussaratho āgacchati, ajjesa rājā hutvā mama senāpatiṭṭhānaṃ dassati, na kho pana mayhaṃ issariyenattho, etasmiṃ gate nikkhamitvā pabbajissāmī’’ti cintetvā ekamante paṭicchanne aṭṭhāsi. Purohito uyyānaṃ pavisitvā mahāsattaṃ nipannakaṃ disvā tūriyāni paggaṇhāpesi. Mahāsatto pabujjhitvā parivattitvā thokaṃ nipajjitvā uṭṭhāya silāpaṭṭe pallaṅkena nisīdi. Atha naṃ purohito añjaliṃ paggaṇhitvā āha – ‘‘rajjaṃ te, deva, pāpuṇātī’’ti. ‘‘Kiṃ aputtakaṃ rājakula’’nti? ‘‘Evaṃ, devā’’ti. ‘‘Tena hi sādhū’’ti. Atha naṃ te tattheva abhisiñcitvā rathaṃ āropetvā mahantena parivārena nagaraṃ pavesesuṃ. So nagaraṃ padakkhiṇaṃ katvā pāsādaṃ abhirūhi. So yasamahantatāya soṇakakumāraṃ na sari.

Sopi tasmiṃ nagaraṃ paviṭṭhe pacchā āgantvā silāpaṭṭe nisīdi. Athassa purato bandhanā pavuttaṃ sālarukkhato paṇḍupalāsaṃ pati. The Flower Adornment Sutra

An Annotated Translation of the Avataṃsaka Sutra

With a Commentarial Synopsis of the Flower Adornment Sutra

(In Three Volumes, 2,500 pages.)

"The Flower Adornment Sutra" is the first and so far only complete English translation of any edition of the Avataṃsaka Sutra, the very long collection of bodhisattva path teachings considered to be so complete that it was otherwise traditionally referred to as "the Bodhisattva Canon." Bhikshu Dharmamitra has translated it from Tripitaka Master Sikṣānanda's 80-fascicle circa 699 ce Chinese rendering of the Sanskrit Mahāvaipulya Buddha Avataṃsaka Sūtra (T0279: 大方廣佛華嚴經). This most complete Tang Dynasty edition of the sutra consists of 39 chapters to which Dharmamitra has added the traditionally appended conclusion to Chapter 39, "The Conduct and Vows of Samantabhadra" that was only finally translated into Chinese a century later (798 ce) by Tripitaka Master Prajñā.

The scenarious that unfold across the course of these 39 chapters introduce an interpenetrating, infinitely expansive, and majestically grand multiverse of countless buddha worlds extending throughout all three periods of time and all dimensions of space, revealing as it does so a cosmos in which all phenomena are visible in any given phenomenon and any given phenomenon is visible in all phenomena, more or less analogous to the vision of the cosmos inferred by the revelations of modern physics in its descriptions of quantum entanglement and quantum non-locality. Meanwhile, the text proceeds to reveal and explain in great detail and with countless cases the cultivation of the bodhisattva path to buddhahood, most notably the ten highest levels of bodhisattva practice known as "the ten bodhisattva grounds."

To aid deeper understanding of the sutra and to clarify the rationale for emendations based on variant readings in different Chinese editions, Bhikshu Dharmamitra has included 1200 endnotes while also appending his "A Commentarial Synopsis of the Flower Adornment Sutra" which serves to assist the student in easily reviewing the content and meaning of each of the forty chapters, some of which run in length to hundreds of pages or even, as in the case of the final chapter, seven hundred pages. Other important and useful sections include a relatively brief introduction, a list of abbreviations, and a glossary of the standard Buddhist technical terminology used throughout all three volumes.

Meditation Instruction Texts:

* The Essentials of Buddhist Meditation *

By Śramaṇa Zhiyi (Chih-i) - (538-597 ce)

Master Zhiyi is the famous Tiantai Mountain meditation master, exegete, and teachings-school founder. His "Essentials of Buddhist Meditation" or "Essentials for Practicing Calming-and-Insight and Dhyana Meditation" is a calming-and-insight (śamatha-vipaśyanā) meditation manual deeply rooted in the early Indian Buddhist meditation tradition. It offers perhaps the most reliable, comprehensive, and practically-useful Buddhist meditation instruction currently available in English.

Translation by Bhikshu Dharmamitra. Includes facing-page source text.

* The Six Dharma Gates to the Sublime *

By Śramaṇa Zhiyi (Chih-i) - (538-597 ce)

This classic, also by Master Zhiyi, serves as an ideal companion volume to The Essentials of Buddhist Meditation. "The Six Dharma Gates to the Sublime" explains the six practices crucial to success in traditional Indian Buddhist breath (ānāpāna) and calming-and-insight (śamatha-vipaśyanā) meditation. Correctly implemented, these six "gates" lead the practitioner to realize the third of the four truths (cessation), of which the "sublimity" referenced in the title is one of the four canonically-described practice aspects.

Translation by Bhikshu Dharmamitra. Includes facing-page source text.

Previously Published Bodhisattva Path Texts:

* Nāgārjuna's Guide to the Bodhisattva Path *

By Ārya Nāgārjuna (ca 2nd c.)

Nāgārjuna's Bodhisaṃbhāra Śāstra with Abridged Bhikshu Vasitva Commentary.

"Nāgārjuna's Guide to the Bodhisattva Path" is Nāgārjuna's Bodhisaṃbhāra Śāstra ("Treatise on the Provisions for Path to Enlightenment"). It describes the essential prerequisites for the complete enlightenment of a buddha. It is accompanied here by an abridged version of its only commentary, originally written by the early Indian Bhikshu Vaśitva.

* The Bodhisaṃbhāra Treatise Commentary *

By the early Indian monk, Bhikshu Vaśitva (ca 300-500 ce)

"The Bodhisaṃbhāra Treatise Commentary" is a very detailed commentary on the meaning of each stanza comprising Ārya Nāgārjuna's Treatise on the Provisions for the Path to Enlightenment. It is the only extant traditional commentary on this important work by Nāgārjuna.

* Nāgārjuna on the Six Perfections *

By Ārya Nāgārjuna

"Nāgārjuna on the Six Perfections" is is a translation of chapters 17-30 of Ārya Nāgārjuna's Exegesis on the Great Perfection of Wisdom Sutra, a free-standing section exclusively devoted to analyzing and explaining the bodhisattva's six perfections. Nāgārjuna sets forth stories, analogies, and analyses as he discourses on the six primary practices forming the core of the Bodhisattva Path.

Translation by Bhikshu Dharmamitra. Includes facing-page source text.

* A Strand of Dharma Jewels *
By Ārya Nāgārjuna

"A Strand of Dharma Jewels" is Tripitaka Master Paramartha's earliest (ca 550 ce) complete edition of Nāgārjuna's Ratnāvalī, a 500-stanza treatise on the Bodhisattva Path presented in the form of a spiritual advisor's letter to an Indian King. In it, Nāgārjuna presents both abstruse teachings and practical advice to lay and monastic practitioners.

Translation by Bhikshu Dharmamitra. Includes facing-page source text.

* Letter from a Friend *
"Letter from a Friend" consists of the Three Earliest Editions of Nāgārjuna's Suhṛllekha, Nāgārjuna's spiritual counsel to an Indian monarch.

By Ārya Nāgārjuna

As translated by Tripitaka Master Guṇavarman (ca 425)
As translated by Tripitaka Master Saṅghavarman (ca 450)
As translated by Tripitaka Master Yijing (ca 675)

English translations with notes by Bhikshu Dharmamitra. Includes facing-page source text.

* Marvelous Stories from the Perfection of Wisdom *

As told by Ārya Nāgārjuna

"Marvelous Stories from the Perfection of Wisdom" consists of 130 stories and short Dharma anecdotes selected from Nāgārjuna's immense commentary on the Great Perfection of Wisdom Sutra. Each story is "framed" by the inclusion of Nāgārjuna's introductory and summarizing Dharma discussions.

Translation by Bhikshu Dharmamitra. Includes facing-page source text.

Resolve-for-Enlightenment / Bodhicitta Texts:

* On Generating the Resolve to Become a Buddha *
"On Generating the Resolve to Become a Buddha," three works on bodhicitta:

By Ārya Nāgārjuna, Patriarch Sheng'an Shixian, and the Tang-Dynasty literatus, Peixiu.

--On Generating the Resolve to Become a Buddha. By Ārya Nāgārjuna. (Ch. 6 of The Ten Grounds Vibhāṣā)

--Exhortation to Resolve on Buddhahood. By the Tang Dynasty literatus, Peixiu. (797-870)

* Vasubandhu's Treatise on the Bodhisattva Vow *

By Vasubandhu Bodhisattva (ca 300)

"Vasubandhu's Treatise on the Bodhisattva Vow" is Vasubandhu's treatise on the The Sutra on Generating the Resolve to Become a Buddha in which Vasubandhu discourses on the causality behind the origination of the bodhisattva vow (bodhicitta) and on the six perfections through which it reaches fruition.

Translation by Bhikshu Dharmamitra. Includes facing-page source text.

Bodhisattva Moral Virtue (Śīla) Texts:

* The Bodhisattva's Practice of Moral Virtue * New !!!   (07/01/2024)
"The Bodhisattva's Practice of Moral Virtue" consists of the Bodhisattva's Moral Code, It's Recitation Ceremony, and Nāgārjuna's Synopsis of the Nature and Practice of the Bodhisattva's Perfection of Moral Virtue.

--The Brahma's Net Sutra Bodhisattva Precepts

--The Semimonthly Bodhisattva Precepts Recitation Ceremony

--Nāgārjuna on the Perfection of Moral Virtue

With a Commentarial Synopsis of the Flower Adornment Sutra

(In Three Volumes, 2,500 pages.)

"The Flower Adornment Sutra" is the first and so far only complete English translation of any edition of the Avataṃsaka Sutra, the very long collection of bodhisattva path teachings considered to be so complete that it was otherwise traditionally referred to as "the Bodhisattva Canon." Bhikshu Dharmamitra has translated it from Tripitaka Master Sikṣānanda's 80-fascicle circa 699 ce Chinese rendering of the Sanskrit Mahāvaipulya Buddha Avataṃsaka Sūtra (T0279: 大方廣佛華嚴經). This most complete Tang Dynasty edition of the sutra consists of 39 chapters to which Dharmamitra has added the traditionally appended conclusion to Chapter 39, "The Conduct and Vows of Samantabhadra" that was only finally translated into Chinese a century later (798 ce) by Tripitaka Master Prajñā.

The scenarious that unfold across the course of these 39 chapters introduce an interpenetrating, infinitely expansive, and majestically grand multiverse of countless buddha worlds extending throughout all three periods of time and all dimensions of space, revealing as it does so a cosmos in which all phenomena are visible in any given phenomenon and any given phenomenon is visible in all phenomena, more or less analogous to the vision of the cosmos inferred by the revelations of modern physics in its descriptions of quantum entanglement and quantum non-locality. Meanwhile, the text proceeds to reveal and explain in great detail and with countless cases the cultivation of the bodhisattva path to buddhahood, most notably the ten highest levels of bodhisattva practice known as "the ten bodhisattva grounds."

To aid deeper understanding of the sutra and to clarify the rationale for emendations based on variant readings in different Chinese editions, Bhikshu Dharmamitra has included 1200 endnotes while also appending his "A Commentarial Synopsis of the Flower Adornment Sutra" which serves to assist the student in easily reviewing the content and meaning of each of the forty chapters, some of which run in length to hundreds of pages or even, as in the case of the final chapter, seven hundred pages. Other important and useful sections include a relatively brief introduction, a list of abbreviations, and a glossary of the standard Buddhist technical terminology used throughout all three volumes.

Meditation Instruction Texts:

* The Essentials of Buddhist Meditation *

By Śramaṇa Zhiyi (Chih-i) - (538-597 ce)

Master Zhiyi is the famous Tiantai Mountain meditation master, exegete, and teachings-school founder. His "Essentials of Buddhist Meditation" or "Essentials for Practicing Calming-and-Insight and Dhyana Meditation" is a calming-and-insight (śamatha-vipaśyanā) meditation manual deeply rooted in the early Indian Buddhist meditation tradition. It offers perhaps the most reliable, comprehensive, and practically-useful Buddhist meditation instruction currently available in English.

Translation by Bhikshu Dharmamitra. Includes facing-page source text.

* The Six Dharma Gates to the Sublime *

By Śramaṇa Zhiyi (Chih-i) - (538-597 ce)

This classic, also by Master Zhiyi, serves as an ideal companion volume to The Essentials of Buddhist Meditation. "The Six Dharma Gates to the Sublime" explains the six practices crucial to success in traditional Indian Buddhist breath (ānāpāna) and calming-and-insight (śamatha-vipaśyanā) meditation. Correctly implemented, these six "gates" lead the practitioner to realize the third of the four truths (cessation), of which the "sublimity" referenced in the title is one of the four canonically-described practice aspects.

Translation by Bhikshu Dharmamitra. Includes facing-page source text.

Previously Published Bodhisattva Path Texts:

* Nāgārjuna's Guide to the Bodhisattva Path *

By Ārya Nāgārjuna (ca 2nd c.)

Nāgārjuna's Bodhisaṃbhāra Śāstra with Abridged Bhikshu Vasitva Commentary.

"Nāgārjuna's Guide to the Bodhisattva Path" is Nāgārjuna's Bodhisaṃbhāra Śāstra ("Treatise on the Provisions for Path to Enlightenment"). It describes the essential prerequisites for the complete enlightenment of a buddha. It is accompanied here by an abridged version of its only commentary, originally written by the early Indian Bhikshu Vaśitva.

* The Bodhisaṃbhāra Treatise Commentary *

By the early Indian monk, Bhikshu Vaśitva (ca 300-500 ce)

"The Bodhisaṃbhāra Treatise Commentary" is a very detailed commentary on the meaning of each stanza comprising Ārya Nāgārjuna's Treatise on the Provisions for the Path to Enlightenment. It is the only extant traditional commentary on this important work by Nāgārjuna.

* Nāgārjuna on the Six Perfections *

By Ārya Nāgārjuna

"Nāgārjuna on the Six Perfections" is is a translation of chapters 17-30 of Ārya Nāgārjuna's Exegesis on the Great Perfection of Wisdom Sutra, a free-standing section exclusively devoted to analyzing and explaining the bodhisattva's six perfections. Nāgārjuna sets forth stories, analogies, and analyses as he discourses on the six primary practices forming the core of the Bodhisattva Path.

Translation by Bhikshu Dharmamitra. Includes facing-page source text.

* A Strand of Dharma Jewels *
By Ārya Nāgārjuna

"A Strand of Dharma Jewels" is Tripitaka Master Paramartha's earliest (ca 550 ce) complete edition of Nāgārjuna's Ratnāvalī, a 500-stanza treatise on the Bodhisattva Path presented in the form of a spiritual advisor's letter to an Indian King. In it, Nāgārjuna presents both abstruse teachings and practical advice to lay and monastic practitioners.

Translation by Bhikshu Dharmamitra. Includes facing-page source text.

* Letter from a Friend *
"Letter from a Friend" consists of the Three Earliest Editions of Nāgārjuna's Suhṛllekha, Nāgārjuna's spiritual counsel to an Indian monarch.

Capas de um capítulo de sutra em pigmento dourado coreano. Papel tingido com índigo, com fileiras de flores douradas e um cartucho de título, c. 1400.

O Avataṃsaka Sūtra (IAST, em sânscrito: अवतंसक सूत्र); ou o Mahāvaipulya Buddhāvataṃsaka Sūtra (em sânscrito: महावैपुल्य बुद्धावतंसक सूत्र), é um dos sutras maaianas mais influentes do budismo do Leste

Asiático. O título é traduzido como Sutra da Guirlanda de Flores, Sutra do Ornamento Floral ou Escritura do Esplendor da Flor.[1] Foi chamado pelo tradutor Thomas Cleary de "a mais grandiosa, a mais abrangente e a mais bela das escrituras budistas".[2]

O Avata□saka Sūtra descreve um cosmos de reinos sobre reinos infinitos, mutuamente contendo um ao outro. Este sutra foi especialmente influente no budismo do Leste Asiático.[3] A visão expressa neste trabalho foi a base para a criação da escola Huayan do budismo chinês, que se caracterizou por uma filosofia de interpenetração. A escola Huayan é conhecida como Hwaeom na Coreia e Kegon no Japão . O sutra também é influente no budismo Chan.[3]

Título

Sânscrito: Mahāvaipulya Buddhāvata□saka Sūtra "O Grande Sutra Vaipulya da Guirlanda de Flores do Buda." Vaipulya ("extenso") refere-se a sūtras chaves grandes e inclusivos.[4] "Guirlanda de flores/grinalda/adorno" refere-se a uma manifestação da beleza das virtudes de Buda[5] ou sua glória inspiradora.[nota 1]
Chinês: Dàfānggugung Fóhuāyán Jīng Chinese: □□□□□□□, comumente conhecido como o Huāyán Jīng (□□□), que significa "Sutra (Esplêndido e Solene) Adornado com Flores." Vaipulya aqui é traduzido como "corretivo e expansivo", fānggungng (□□).[8] Huā (□) significa de uma vez "flor"(arcaico, ou seja, □) e "magnificência". Yán (□), abreviação de zhuàngyán (□□), significa "decorar (para que seja solene, digno)."
Japonês: Daihōkō Butsu-kegon Kyō (□□□□□□□), geralmente conhecido como Kegon Kyō (□□□). Este título é idêntico ao chinês acima, apenas em caracteres Shinjitai.
em coreano: □□□□□□□ Daebanggwang Bulhwaeom Gyeong ou Hwaeom Gyeong (□□□), a pronúncia sino-coreana pronúncia do nome chinês.
em vietnamita: Đ□i ph□□ng qu□ng Ph□t hoa nghiêm kinh, encurtado a Hoa nghiêm kinh, a pronúncia sino-vietnamita do nome chinês.
em tibetano: □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□; Wylie: mdo phal po che
De acordo com um Manuscrito de Dunhuang, este texto também era conhecido como o Bodhisattvapiṭaka Buddhāvata□saka Sūtra.[7]

História

O Avata□saka Sūtra foi escrito em etapas, começando a partir de pelo menos 500 anos após a morte do Buda. Uma fonte afirma que é "um texto muito longo composto por uma série de escrituras originalmente independentes de proveniência diversa, todas combinadas, provavelmente na Ásia Central, no final do terceiro ou quarto século EC."[9] Estudiosos japoneses como Akira Hirakawa e Otake Susumu, entretanto, argumentam que o original em sânscrito foi compilado na Índia a partir de sutras já em circulação que também tinham o nome de "Buddhavatamsaka".[10]

Duas traduções completas em chinês do Avataṃsaka Sūtra foram feitas. A tradução fragmentária provavelmente começou no século II, e o famoso Sutra dos Dez Estágios, muitas vezes tratado como uma escritura individual, foi traduzido pela primeira vez no século III. A primeira versão completa em chinês foi traduzida por Buddhabhadra por volta do ano 420 em 60 pergaminhos com 34 capítulos,[11] e o segundo por Śikṣānanda cerca de 699 em 80 pergaminhos com 40 capítulos.[12][13] Há também uma tradução da seção Ga□avavyūha por Prajñā por volta de 798. A segunda tradução inclui mais sutras do que a primeira, e a tradução tibetana, que ainda é posterior, inclui muitas diferenças com a versão de 80 pergaminhos. Os estudiosos concluem que os sutras foram sendo adicionados à coleção. A única versão tibetana existente foi traduzida do sânscrito original por Jinamitra et al. no final do século IX.[14]

Segundo Paramārtha, um monge do século VI de Ujjain na Índia central, o Avatassaka Sūtra também é chamado de "Bodhisattva Piṭaka." Em sua tradução do Mahāyānasagragrahabhāṣya, há uma referência ao Bodhisattva Piṭaka, que Paramārtha observa é o mesmo que o Avatassaka Sūtra em 100.000 linhas. A identificação do Avatassaka Sūtra como um "Bodhisattva Piṭaka" também foi registrada no cólofon de um manuscrito chinês nas Grutas de Mogao: "Explicação dos Dez Estágios, intitulada Criador da Sabedoria de um Ser Onisciente em Graus, um capítulo do sūtra mahāyāna Bodhisattvapiṭaka Buddhāvataṃsaka, terminou."[7]

Visão geral

Ilustração do Avatamsaka Sutra no Songgwangsa em Suncheon, Coreia. Dinastia Joseon, 1644.
O sutra, entre os sutras budistas mais longos, é uma compilação de textos díspares sobre vários tópicos, como o caminho bodisatva, a interpenetração de fenômenos (darmas), a onipresença da Budeidade, os poderes milagrosos dos Budas e bodisattvas, os poderes visionários da meditação e a igualdade das coisas em vacuidade.[15][16]

Segundar Paul Demiéville, a coleção Avatamsaka é "caracterizada por imagens visionárias transbordantes, que multiplicam tudo ao infinito, por um tipo de monadologia que ensina a interpenetração do um todo e dos muitos particularizados, do Espírito e da matéria" e pela "noção de um progresso gradual em direção à libertação através de estágios sucessivos e uma preferência obsessiva por imagens de luz e brilho".[17] Da mesma forma, Alan Fox descreveu a visão de mundo do sutra como "fractal", "holográfica" e "psicodélica".[18]

A visão leste asiática do texto é que ele expressa o universo visto por um Buda (o Dharmadhatu), que vê todos os fenômenos como vazios e, portanto, infinitamente interpenetrantes, do ponto de vista de iluminação.[17] Esta interpenetração é descrita no Avatamsaka como a percepção "de que os campos cheios de assembleias, os seres e éons que são tantos quanto todas as partículas de poeira, estão todos presentes em cada partícula de poeira."[19] Assim, a visão da realidade de um Buda também é considerada "inconcebível; nenhum ser senciente pode compreendê-la".[19]

Paul Williams observa que o sutra fala de ambas doutrinas Iogachara e Madhyamaka, afirmando que todas as coisas estão vazias de existência inerente e também de uma "pura senciência ou consciência imaculada (amala-citta) como base de todos os fenômenos".[20] O Avatamsaka sutra também destaca o poder visionário e místico de alcançar a sabedoria espiritual que vê a natureza do mundo:[20]

"Ação sem fim surge da mente; da ação surge o mundo multifacetado. Tendo entendido que a verdadeira natureza do mundo é a mente, você exibe corpos próprios seus em harmonia com o mundo. Tendo percebido que este mundo é como um sonho, e que todos os Budas são como meras reflexões, que todos os princípios [dharma] são como um eco, você se move desimpedido no mundo (Tradução in Gomez, 1967: lxxxi)"

Como resultado de seu poder meditativo, os Budas têm a capacidade mágica de criar e manifestar formas infinitas, e fazem isso de muitas maneiras hábeis, a partir da grande compaixão por todos os seres.[21]

"Em todos os átomos de todas as terras
Buda entra, todo e cada um,
Produzindo exibições milagrosas para seres sencientes:
Esse é o caminho do Vairocana....
As técnicas dos Budas são inconcebíveis,
Todos aparecem de acordo com a mente dos seres....
Em cada átomo os Budas de todos os tempos

Aparecem, de acordo com inclinações;
Enquanto sua natureza essencial não vem nem vai,
Por seu poder de voto, eles permeiam os mundos."[22]

O objetivo desses ensinamentos é levar todos os seres através dos dez níveis de bodisatva ao objetivo de Budeidade (o que é feito pelo bem de todos os outros seres). Esses estágios de realização espiritual também são amplamente discutidos em várias partes do sutra (livro 15, livro 26).[17]

O sutra também inclui numerosos Budas e suas Terras de Buda que são considerados infinitos, representando uma vasta visão cósmica da realidade, embora se concentre em uma figura mais importante, o Buda Vairocana (grande radiância). Vairocana é um ser cósmico que é a fonte de luz e iluminação do 'universo Lótus', que é dito conter todos os sistemas do mundo.[17] De acordo com Paul Williams, O Buda "é dito ou implícito em vários lugares neste vasto e heterogêneo sutra como sendo o próprio universo, sendo o mesmo que 'ausência de existência intrínseca' ou vacuidade, e sendo a consciência onisciente onipresente do Buda."[21] O próprio corpo de Vairocana também é visto como um reflexo de todo o universo:[23]

"O corpo de Buda é inconcebível. Em seu corpo estão todos os tipos de terras de seres sencientes. Mesmo em um único poro existem inúmeros oceanos vastos."

Além disso, para o Avatamsaka, o Buda histórico Sakyamuni é simplesmente uma emanação mágica do Buda cósmico Vairocana.[21]

Luis Gomez observa que há uma ordem subjacente à coleção. Os discursos na versão sutra com 39 capítulos ou livros são entregues a oito públicos diferentes ou "assembleias" em sete locais, como Bodh Gaya e o Céu Tusita.[24] Cada "assembleia" inclui vários locais, tópicos doutrinários e personagens. As principais "assembleias" em que a coleção é tradicionalmente dividida são:[24][25]

No Bodhima□aa (Livros 1-5)

Nesta assembleia no Bodhima□aa (a sede do despertar sob a árvore bodhi), o bodisatva Samantabhadra e o Buda discutem a natureza da realidade e como Vairocana Buda é onipresente em todo o dharmadhātu.

O Salão da Luz Universal (Livros 6-12)

O bodisatva Mañjuśrī pergunta ao Buda sobre as várias maneiras pelas quais as Quatro Nobres Verdades (que são a base de toda a prática bodisatva) são ensinadas. O bodisatva Bhadramukha também ensina O Caminho do Bodisatva.

Palácio de Indra (Livros 13-18)

O Buda ensina no Céu Trayastrimsa no Palácio de Indra. Dharmamati ensina como o caminho do bodhisattva progride em dez moradas ou viharas.

Palácio de Yama (Livros 19-22)

O Buda ensina como o mundo é uma criação mental e fornece o famoso símile do mundo sendo como uma pintura e a mente sendo o pintor. O bodisatva Gunavana ensina as dez práticas (carya) de bodisatvas e os dez tesouros inesgotáveis.

"Naquela época, o Mundialmente Honrado, sem deixar o pé das árvores da iluminação e os picos das montanhas polares, dirigiu-se ao salão adornado de joias do palácio do céu Suyama. O rei do céu Suyama, vendo de longe o Buda chegando, produziu por poderes mágicos um trono de leão em pedestal de lótus de joias em seu palácio, com um milhão de camadas de decorações, envolto em um milhão de redes douradas, coberto com um milhão de cortinas de flores, um milhão de cortinas de guirlandas, um milhão de cortinas de perfumes e um milhão de cortinas de joias, cercadas por um milhão de copas cada de flores, guirlandas, perfumes e joias; um milhão de luzes o iluminavam. Um milhão de reis celestiais do céu Suyama se curvaram em respeito, um milhão de reis Brahma dançaram de alegria, um milhão de seres iluminados cantaram louvores. Um milhão de sinfonias celestiais cada uma tocou um milhão de tons de verdade, continuando interminavelmente; um milhão de nuvens de várias flores, um milhão de nuvens de várias guirlandas, um milhão de nuvens de vários ornamentos e um milhão de nuvens de vários mantos cobriam ao todo redor; um milhão de nuvens de várias joias que satisfaziam desejos brilhavam com luz. O trono nasceu de um milhão de tipos de raízes de bondade, protegido por um milhão de Budas, aumentado por um milhão de tipos de virtudes, dignificado e purificado por um milhão de tipos de fé e um milhão de tipos de votos, produzidos por um milhão de tipos de ação, estabelecido por um milhão de tipos de verdades, conjurado por um milhão de tipos de poderes espirituais, sempre produzindo um milhão de tipos de sons revelando todas as verdades."[26]

Céu Tusita (Livros 23-25)
Vajradhvaja ensina as maneiras que os bodisatvas dedicam e transferem seu mérito.

"com a mente desapegada, ilimitada e liberada, cultivar a prática do Bem Universal e alcançar todos os poderes espirituais dos seres iluminados—poderes espirituais de força ilimitadamente grande, poderes espirituais de conhecimento independente imensurável, poder espiritual para aparecer em todas as terras búdicas sem se mover fisicamente, poder espiritual de liberdade irrestrita e ininterrupta, poder espiritual para concentrar todas as terras búdicas em um só lugar, poder espiritual para permear todos as terras búdicas com um corpo, poder espiritual de perambulação desimpedida e liberta, poder espiritual de liberdade instantânea sem fazer nada, poder espiritual permanecendo na ausência de essência e não-dependência, e poder espiritual para estabelecer progressivamente mundos incontáveis em um único poro, viajando para todos os locais de iluminação dos Budas em todo o cosmos para ensinar os seres sencientes e fazer com que todos eles entrem pela porta do grande conhecimento; com a mente desapegada, ilimitada e liberada, entrar na porta do Bem Universal, produzir as práticas dos seres iluminados, e com conhecimento independente entrar em inúmeras terras búdicas em um único instante, conter imensuráveis terras búdicas em um corpo, obter o conhecimento de como purificar as terras búdicas e sempre observar as terras búdicas ilimitadas com conhecimento e sabedoria, nunca desenvolvendo a mentalidade da salvação individual; com a mente desapegada, ilimitada e liberada, cultivar as práticas dos meios convenientes do Bem Universal, entrar no reino da sabedoria, nascer na casa dos iluminados, permanecer no caminho dos seres iluminados, cumprir infinitas aspirações supremas, cumprir infinitos votos sem cessar, e conhecer todos os reinos da realidade em todos os tempos; com a mente desapegada, ilimitada, liberada, realizar o puro ensinamento do Bem Universal, capaz de conter os inumeráveis mundos do cosmos em todo o espaço num ponto tão grande quanto a ponta de um cabelo, causando com que tudo seja visto claramente, com o mesmo aplicando-se a todos os pontos do espaço do cosmos; com a mente desapegada, ilimitada e liberada, realizar as técnicas mentais profundas do Bem Universal, capaz em um único momento mental de manifestar os estados mentais de um ser senciente por incontáveis éons, e da mesma forma manifestar os estados mentais de todos os seres sencientes por incontáveis éons"[26]

Céu Paranirmitavasavartin (Livro 26)
Este é o Sutra dos Dez Estágios (Daśabhūmika sutra), que se concentra nos dez bhūmis (níveis ou estágios) do caminho do bodhisattva.

O Salão da Luz Universal parte 2 (livros 27-38)
O Buda retorna ao salão da luz universal e Samantabhadra ensina os dez samadhis, poderes supernormais e dez tipos de paciência (kshanti). Vários outros ensinamentos sobre o caminho do bodhisattva são dados, que recapitulam os temas abordados nos livros anteriores. A incomensurabilidade do Estado de Buda é discutida e diz-se que Samantabhadra incorpora todas as atividades da Budeidade onipresente.

"Então, pelo poder espiritual do Buda, bem como pela lei natural, em cada uma das dez direções, tantos mundos quanto átomos em dez números indescritíveis de dezenas de quintilhões de terras búdicas, todos tremeram de seis maneiras e choveram chuvas de nuvens de todas as flores que superam as dos céus, assim como nuvens de perfumes, incensos, mantos, dosséis, estandartes, flâmulas, joias e todos os tipos de enfeites; choveu nuvens de música, nuvens de seres iluminados, nuvens de formas físicas de budas incontáveis, nuvens de louvores infinitos aos budas, nuvens de vozes de budas preenchendo todos os universos, nuvens incontáveis de mundos magicamente organizados, nuvens incontáveis desenvolvendo a iluminação, nuvens incontáveis de luz brilhando, e nuvens incontáveis de manifestações místicas expondo o Ensinamento. Como neste mundo, no local da iluminação, sob a árvore da iluminação, no palácio do ser iluminado, o Buda, o Completamente Iluminado, foi visto expondo este ensinamento, assim foi em todos os mundos nas dez direções. Então, devido ao poder espiritual do Buda, bem como pela lei natural, vieram a esta terra tantos grandes seres iluminados quanto átomos em dez terras búdicas de cada uma das dez direções, de além tantos mundos quanto átomos em dez infinidades de terras búdicas. Preenchendo as dez direções, eles falaram estas palavras ao Bem Universal [Samantabhadra]; 'É muito bom, Filho de Buda, que você possa explicar este profundo ensinamento da entrega da profecia da iluminação, a maior promessa dos budas. Todos nós somos chamados de Bem Universal, assim como você, e cada um veio a esta terra de um mundo chamado Excelência Universal, da companhia de budas chamada Representante da Liberdade da Universalidade. Todos, pelo poder espiritual de Buda, expõem este ensinamento, com tais assembleias e tais declarações, todos iguais, sem aumento nem diminuição. Todos nós viemos a este local de iluminação pelo poder espiritual do Buda para sermos suas testemunhas. Como nós, inúmeros seres iluminados, servimos como testemunhas neste local de iluminação, o mesmo acontece em todos os mundos nas dez direções."[26]

Pavilhão de Jetavana (Livro 39)

Ilustrações em tinta dourada do último livro do Avatamsaka Sutra, feitas durante a Dinastia Goryeo, século XIV
Este é o Ga□avavyūha Sūtra, que contém a história da carreira espiritual do bodisatva Sudhana, seu estudo sob numerosos professores e sua libertação inconcebível.

Sutras individuais

Sudhana aprendendo com um dos cinquenta e dois professores ao longo de sua jornada em direção à iluminação. Manuscrito sânscrito, século XI-XII.
Pelo menos duas partes da coletânea Avatamsaka também circulou como sutras individuais: o Sutra dos Dez Estágios e o Sutra do Arranjo de Flores. Esses dois sutras também sobreviveram individualmente no original sânscrito (enquanto o restante do Avatamsaka apenas sobrevive na tradução).[15]

Sutras dos Dez Estágios

O sutra também é conhecido por sua descrição detalhada do curso da prática do bodisatva através de dez estágios em que o Sutra dos Dez Estágios, ou Daśabhūmika Sūtra (□□□, em tibetano: Wylie: 'phags pa sa bcu pa'i mdo), é o nome dado a este capítulo do Avata□saka Sūtra. Este sutra dá detalhes sobre os dez estágios (bhūmis) de desenvolvimento um bodisatva deve passar para alcançar a iluminação suprema. Os dez estágios também são representados no Lakkāvatāra Sūtra e no Śūraggama Sūtra. O sutra também aborda o tema do desenvolvimento da "aspiração à Iluminação" (bodicita) para atingir a budeidade suprema.[15]

O Sutra do Arranjo de Flores

O último capítulo do Avatamsaka circula como um texto separado e importante conhecido como o Ga□avavyūha Sutra (arranjo de flores, ou "buquê";[27] □□□□ "Entrando no Reino do Dharma"[28]).

Considerado o "clímax" do texto maior,[29] esta seção detalha a peregrinação do leigo Sudhana a várias terras (mundanas e supra-mundanas) a mando do bodhisattva Mañjuśrī encontrar um amigo espiritual que o instrua nos caminhos de um bodisatva. Segundo Luis Gomez, esse sutra também pode ser "considerado emblemático de toda a coleção."[24]

Apesar do primeiro estar no final do Avata□saka, o Ga□avavyūha e os Dez Estágios são geralmente acreditados como sendo os capítulos escritos mais antigos do sutra.[30]

À esquerda, pintura da Dinastia Goryeo de Avalokiteshvara da Lua-d'Água,[31] segurando um ramo de salgueiro.[32] Na China, sob o nome de Guan Yin, ele foi femininizado.[32] O símbolo do véu de luar e reflexo nas águas como emanação da Compaixão, atributo de Avalokiteshvara, aparece em versos do Avatamsaka Sutra:[31] "Com uma grande rede de luz, removo o sofrimento dos seres sencientes causado pela febre das miríades de paixões." "Assim como a lua no céu Supera as estrelas e parece crescer e minguar, Mostra seu reflexo em todas as águas, E aparece face a face com aqueles que a contemplam, Assim também a lua clara de Buda Ofusca outros veículos, mostrando extensão e brevidade, Aparecendo na clara mente-água de humanos e deuses E parecendo estar presente a todos" "O bodisatva é como o sol e a lua brilhantes. Um espelho branco brilhante aparece suspenso no céu. A sombra da lua reflete em inúmeros rios, Mas a entidade nos céus não se mistura com a água. Assim são os ensinamentos puros do bodisatva. Ele aparece na água das mentes de todos os seres, Mas não se mistura com o mundo"

Sudhana, no capítulo final do sutra (Entrada no Reino da Realidade), encontra progressivamente deusas compassivas, com iluminação e domínios cada vez maiores: [26] "houve um éon chamado Não Realização, no qual servi oitenta e quatro mil duodecilhões de budas; houve um éon chamado Bela Luz, no qual servi tantos budas quanto átomos neste continente;" "Ela usava uma crista sagrada adornada com o orbe da lua, e seu corpo mostrava reflexos de todas as estrelas e constelações. Ele também viu em seus poros todos os seres sencientes que haviam sido libertados por ela das calamidades de circunstâncias desfavoráveis, males e condições miseráveis. Ele também viu em seus poros todos os seres sencientes que ela havia estabelecido no céu, e todos os que ela havia aperfeiçoado na iluminação dos ouvintes e iluminados individuais, e na onisciência. Ele também viu em seus poros todos os vários meios, incorporações e aparências que ela assumiu para aperfeiçoá-los. Ele também ouviu vindo de seus poros os vários enunciados que ela usava para ensiná-los e desenvolvê-los. Ele também percebia em seus poros a sincronização, a adaptação às inclinações e interesses dos seres sencientes, as práticas iluminadoras, meios contundentes, formas de transformação mística através da concentração, poderes, estados, observações, contemplações, projeções místicas, poderosas expansões da grande pessoa e maestrias livres da libertação pelos quais foram aperfeiçoados." "Ele viu a deusa da noite sentada em um grande assento de lótus cheio de diamantes iluminando as moradas em todas as cidades, acompanhada por um número incontável de deusas da noite, com um corpo aparecendo para os seres em todos os reinos, com um corpo igual em forma a todos os seres, com um corpo que aparece a todos os seres, com um corpo imaculado por todos os mundos, com um corpo igual a todos os seres em número de manifestações, com um corpo que transcende todos os mundos, com um corpo adaptado para desenvolver e guiar todos os seres, com um corpo proclamando a verdade em todos os reinos, com um corpo alcançando todos os lugares, com um corpo finalmente livre de obstruções, com um corpo da essência daqueles que chegam à Talidade, com um corpo guiando todos os seres para a perfeição final."

Ao final, Sudhana é apresentado a apresentações mágicas do cosmos por Maitreya e culmina com a visão da suprema budeidade Samantabhadra, o "Universalmente Bom":[26]

"Ele também viu conjuntos imensuráveis de reflexos nos espelhos, reflexos de assembleias de budas, círculos de seres iluminados, congregações de discípulos, grupos de auto-iluminados, terras contaminadas, terras puras, terras contaminadas e puras, reflexos de todos os budas em um mundo, mundos com budas, mundos pequenos, mundos grandes, mundos sutis, mundos grosseiros, mundos na rede cósmica de Indra, mundos invertidos, mundos nivelados, mundos de infernos, animais e fantasmas, mundos cheios de celestiais e humanos. Ele também viu inúmeros seres iluminados nos passeios ou sentados em seus assentos, engajados em várias atividades. Alguns estavam andando, alguns estavam fazendo exercícios espirituais, alguns praticavam observação, alguns projetavam compaixão universal, alguns trabalhavam em várias ciências relacionadas ao bem-estar do mundo, alguns instruíam, alguns recitavam, alguns estavam escrevendo, alguns estavam fazendo perguntas, alguns estavam engajados no amadurecimento da conduta, concentração e conhecimento, alguns estavam fazendo votos."

"Ele viu nuvens de raios de luz tão numerosos quanto átomos em todas as terras búdicas emanarem de cada um dos poros do Universalmente Bom e iluminar todos os mundos em todo o espaço do cosmos, aliviando a dor de todos os seres. Ele viu tantas auras de luz quanto átomos em todas as terras búdicas emanarem do corpo do Universalmente Bom, aumentando o êxtase de todos os seres iluminados. Ele viu nuvens de chamas perfumadas de várias cores emanarem da cabeça e dos poros do Universalmente Bom, permeando as audiências de todos os budas e chovendo sobre eles. Ele viu tantas nuvens de todos os tipos de flores quanto átomos em todas as terras búdicas emanarem de cada um dos poros do Universalmente Bom, enchendo as audiências de todos os Budas e chovendo sobre eles. (...) Ele viu tantas multidões de seres iluminados quanto átomos em todas as terras búdicas emanarem de cada poro, em toda e cada terra búdica ilustrando os oceanos de votos de todos os seres iluminados para a perfeição da prática de seres iluminadores universalmente bons. Ele viu tantas nuvens de práticas do ser iluminador Universalmente Bom quanto átomos em todas as terras búdicas emanarem de cada poro, chovendo chuvas de realização dos desejos de todos os seres, aumentando a enchente de alegria da obtenção da onisciência. Ele também viu tantas nuvens de perfeita iluminação quanto átomos em todas as terras búdicas emanarem de todos os poros, mostrando a iluminação perfeita em todas as terras búdicas, aumentando a grande energia espiritual da obtenção da onisciência. (...) [Disse Universalmente Bom] 'Olhe para este corpo que alcancei, produzido ao longo de infinitos éons, difícil de aparecer mesmo em decilhões de éons, difícil de ver. Seres que não plantaram raízes de bondade não podem nem ouvir falar de mim, muito menos me ver.'"

Tradução

O Avataṃsaka Sūtra foi traduzido em sua totalidade da edição Śikṣānanda por Thomas Cleary, e foi dividido originalmente em três volumes. A última edição, de 1993, está contida em um grande volume único, abrangendo 1656 páginas.[33]

A Escritura Do Ornamento Da Flor: Uma tradução do Avatamsaka Sūtra (1993) de Thomas Cleary, ISBN 0-87773-940-4

Além da tradução de Thomas Cleary, City of Ten Thousand Buddhas está traduzindo o Avataṃsaka Sūtra junto com um longo comentário do Venerável Hsuan Hua.[34] Atualmente, mais de vinte volumes estão disponíveis, e estima-se que possa haver 75-100 volumes na edição completa.[35]

Notas

O Divyavadana também chama um milagre em Śrāvastī de Buddhāvataṃsaka, ou seja, ele criou inúmeras emanações de si mesmo sentado em flores de lótus.[6][7]

The Buddhāvataṃsaka-nāma-mahāvaipulya-sūtra (The Mahāvaipulya Sūtra named “Buddhāvataṃsaka”) is one of the most influential Mahāyāna sutras of East Asian Buddhism.[1] It is also often referred to as the Avataṃsaka Sūtra.[1] In Classical Sanskrit, avataṃsaka means garland, wreath, or any circular ornament, such as an earring.[2] Thus, the title may be rendered in English as A Garland of Buddhas, Buddha Ornaments, or Buddha’s Garland.[2] In Buddhist Hybrid Sanskrit, the term avataṃsaka means “a great number,” “a multitude,” or “a collection.” This is matched by the Tibetan title of the sutra, which is A Multitude of Buddhas ("sangs rgyas phal po che").[2]

Modern scholars consider the Buddhāvataṃsaka to be a compilation of numerous smaller sutras, many of which originally circulated independently and then were later brought together into the larger mature Buddhāvataṃsaka. Many of these independent Buddhāvataṃsaka sutras survive in Chinese translation.[1]

The text has been described by the translator Thomas Cleary "the most grandiose, the most comprehensive, and the most beautifully arrayed of the Buddhist scriptures."[3] The Buddhāvataṃsaka describes a cosmos of infinite realms upon realms filled with an immeasurable number of Buddhas. This sutra was especially influential in East Asian Buddhism.[4] The vision expressed in this work was the foundation for the creation of the Huayan school of Chinese Buddhism, which was characterized by a philosophy of interpenetration. The Huayan school is known as Hwaeom in Korea and Kegon in Japan. The sutra is also influential in Chan Buddhism.[4]

Title

This work has been used in a variety of countries. Some major traditional titles include the following:

Sanskrit: Buddhāvata□saka-nāma-mahāvaipulya-sūtra, The Mahāvaipulya Sūtra named “Buddhāvata□saka”. Vaipulya ("extensive") refers to key Mahayana sutras.[5] "Garland/wreath/adornment" refers to a manifestation of the beauty of Buddha's virtues[6] or his inspiring glory.[N.B. 1] The term avata□saka also means “a great number,” “a multitude,” or “a collection.” This matches the content of the sutra, in which numerous Buddhas are depicted as manifestations of the cosmic Buddha Vairocana.[2]

Chinese: Dàfāngguǎng Fóhuāyán Jīng □□□□□□□, commonly known as the Huāyán Jīng (□□□), meaning "Flower-adorned (Splendid & Solemn) Sūtra." Vaipulya here is translated as "corrective and expansive", fāngguǎng (□□).[9] Huā (□) means at once "flower" (archaic; namely □) and "magnificence." Yán (□), short for zhuàngyán (□□), means "to decorate (so that it is solemn, dignified)."

Japanese: Daihōkō Butsu-kegon Kyō (□□□□□□□), usually known as the Kegon Kyō (□□□). This title is identical to Chinese above, just in Shinjitai characters.

Korean: □□□□□□□ Daebanggwang Bulhwaeom Gyeong or Hwaeom Gyeong (□□□), the Sino-Korean pronunciation of the Chinese name.

Vietnamese: Đ□i ph□□ng qu□ng Ph□t hoa nghiêm kinh, shortened to the Hoa nghiêm kinh, the Sino-Vietnamese pronunciation of the Chinese name.

Tibetan: □□□□□□□□□□□□□□, Wylie: mdo phal po che, pronounced Do phalpoché

Tangut (romanized): Tha cha wa tha fa sho ldwi rye

According to a Dunhuang manuscript, this text was also known as the Bodhisattvapiṭaka Buddhāvata□saka Sūtra.[8]

History

The Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra was written in stages, beginning from at least 500 years after the death of the Buddha. One source claims that it is "a very long text composed of a number of originally independent scriptures of diverse provenance, all of which were combined, probably in Central Asia, in the late third or the fourth century CE."[10] Japanese scholars such as Akira Hirakawa and Otake Susumu meanwhile argue that the Sanskrit original was compiled in India from sutras already in circulation which also bore the name "Buddhavatamsaka".[11]

Two full Chinese translations of the Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra were made. Fragmentary translation probably began in the 2nd century CE, and the famous Ten Stages Sutra, often treated as an individual scripture, was first translated in the 3rd century. The first complete Chinese version was translated by Buddhabhadra around 420 in 60 scrolls with 34 chapters,[12] and the second by Śikṣānanda around 699 in 80 scrolls with 40 chapters.[13][14] There is also a translation of the Gaṇḍavyūha section by Prajñā around 798. The second translation includes more sutras than the first, and the Tibetan translation, which is still later, includes many differences with the 80 scrolls version. Scholars conclude that sutras were being added to the collection.

The single extant Tibetan version was translated from the original Sanskrit by Jinamitra et al. at the end of ninth century.[15]

According to Paramārtha, a 6th-century monk from Ujjain in central India, the Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra is also called the "Bodhisattva Piṭaka."[8] In his translation of the Mahāyānasaṃgrahabhāṣya, there is a reference to the Bodhisattva Piṭaka, which Paramārtha notes is the same as the Avataṃsaka Sūtra in 100,000 lines.[8] Identification of the Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra as a "Bodhisattva Piṭaka" was also recorded in the colophon of a Chinese manuscript at the Mogao Caves: "Explication of the Ten Stages, entitled Creator of the Wisdom of an Omniscient Being by Degrees, a chapter of the Mahāyāna sūtra Bodhisattvapiṭaka Buddhāvataṃsaka, has ended."[8]

Overview

Illustration of the Avatamsaka Sutra at Songgwangsa in Suncheon, Korea. Joseon dynasty, 1644.

The sutra, among the longest Buddhist sutras, is a compilation of disparate texts on various topics such as the Bodhisattva path, the interpenetration of phenomena (dharmas), the omnipresence of Buddhahood, the miraculous powers of the Buddhas and bodhisattvas, the visionary powers of meditation, and the equality of things in emptiness.[16][17]

According to Paul Demiéville, the Buddhāvataṃsaka collection is "characterized by overflowing visionary images, which multiply everything to infinity, by a type of monadology that teaches the interpenetration of the one whole and the particularized many, of spirit and matter" and by "the notion of a gradual progress towards liberation through successive stages and an obsessive preference for images of light and radiance."[18] Likewise, Alan Fox has described the sutra's worldview as "fractal", "holographic", and "psychedelic".[19]

The East Asian view of the text is that it expresses the universe as seen by a Buddha (the Dharmadhatu), who sees all phenomena as empty and thus infinitely interpenetrating, from the point of view of enlightenment.[18] This interpenetration is described in the Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra as the perception "that the fields full of assemblies, the beings and aeons which are as many as all the dust particles, are all present in every particle of dust."[20] Thus, a Buddha's view of reality is also said to be "inconceivable; no sentient being can fathom it".[20]

Paul Williams notes that the sutra speaks of both Yogacara and Madhyamaka doctrines, stating that all things are empty of inherent existence and also of a "pure untainted awareness or consciousness (amala-citta) as the ground of all phenomena".[21] The Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra also highlights the visionary and mystical power of attaining the spiritual wisdom which sees the nature of the world:

Endless action arises from the mind; from action arises the multifarious world. Having understood that the world's true nature is mind, you display bodies of your own in harmony with the world. Having realized that this world is like a dream, and that all Buddhas are like mere reflections, that all principles [dharma] are like an echo, you move unimpeded in the world (Trans in Gomez, 1967: lxxxi)[21]

As a result of their meditative power, Buddhas have the magical ability to create and manifest infinite forms, and they do this in many skillful ways out of great compassion for all beings.[22]

In all atoms of all lands
Buddha enters, each and every one,
Producing miracle displays for sentient beings:
Such is the way of Vairocana....
The techniques of the Buddhas are inconceivable,
All appearing in accord with beings’ minds....
In each atom the Buddhas of all times
Appear, according to inclinations;
While their essential nature neither comes nor goes,
By their vow power they pervade the worlds.(Cleary 1984–7: I, Bk 4)

Jin Dynasty (1115–1234) statue of Vairocana (Chinese: □□□□; pinyin: Dàrì Rúlái), Shanhua Temple, Datong, Shanxi, China.
The point of these teachings is to lead all beings through the ten bodhisattva levels to the goal of Buddhahood (which is done for sake of all other beings). These stages of spiritual attainment are also widely discussed in various parts of the sutra (book 15, book 26).[18]

The sutra also includes numerous Buddhas and their Buddhalands which are said to be infinite, representing a vast cosmic view of reality, though it centers on a most important figure, the Buddha Mahavairocana ("Great Radiance" or "The Great Illuminator"). Vairocana is a cosmic being who is the source of light and enlightenment of the 'Lotus universe', and who is said to contain all world systems within his cosmic body.[18] According to Paul Williams, the Buddha "is said or implied at various places in this vast and heterogeneous sutra to be the universe itself, to be the same as ‘absence of intrinsic existence’ or emptiness, and to be the Buddha's all-pervading omniscient awareness."[22] The very body of Vairocana is also seen as a reflection of the whole universe:

The body of [Vairocana] Buddha is inconceivable. In his body are all sorts of lands of sentient beings. Even in a single pore are countless vast oceans.[23]

Also, for the Buddhāvata□sakasūtra, the historical Buddha Sakyamuni is simply a magical emanation of the cosmic Buddha Vairocana.[22]

Luis Gomez notes that there is an underlying order to the collection. The discourses in the sutra version with 39 chapters or books are delivered to eight different audiences or "assemblies" in seven locations such as Bodh Gaya and the Tusita Heaven.[24] Each "assembly" includes various locales, doctrinal topics and characters. The main "assemblies" which the collection is traditionally divided into are:[24][25]

At the Bodhimaṇḍa (Books 1–5)

In this assembly at the Bodhimaṇḍa (the seat of awakening under the bodhi tree), the bodhisattva Samantabhadra and the Buddha discuss the nature of reality and how Vairocana Buddha is omnipresent throughout the dharmadhātu.

The Hall of Universal Light (Books 6–12)

The bodhisattva Mañjuśrī asks the Buddha about the various ways that the four noble truths (which are the basis of all bodhisattva practice) are taught. The bodhisattva Bhadramukha also teaches the Bodhisattva Path.

Indra's Palace (Books 13–18)

The Buddha teaches in Trāyastriṃśa Heaven at the Palace of Indra. Dharmamati teaches on how the bodhisattva path progresses in ten abodes or viharas.

Yama's Palace (Books 19–22)

The Buddha teaches on how the world is a mental creation and provides the famous simile of the world being like a painting and the mind being the painter. The bodhisattva Gunavana teaches the ten practices (carya) of bodhisattvas and the ten inexhaustible treasuries.

Tusita Heaven (Books 23–25)

Vajradhvaja teaches the ways that bodhisattvas dedicate and transfer their merit.

Paranirmitavasavartin Heaven (Book 26)

This is the Ten Stages Sutra (Daśabhūmika sutra), which focuses on the ten bhūmis (levels or stages) of the bodhisattva path.

The Hall of Universal Light part 2 (Books 27–38)

The Buddha returns to the hall of universal light and Samantabhadra teaches the ten samadhis, supernormal powers, and ten types of patience (kshanti). Various other teachings on the bodhisattva path are given, which recapitulate the themes covered in the previous books. The immeasurability of Buddhahood is discussed and Samantabhadra is said to embody all the activities of the omnipresent Buddhahood.

Jetavana Pavillion (Book 39)

This is the Gaṇḍavyūha Sūtra, which contains the story of the bodhisattva Sudhana's spiritual career, study under numerous teachers and his inconceivable liberation.

Individual sutras

Various "chapters" of the Buddhāvataṃsaka collection also circulated as individual sutras. These include the Ten Stages Sutra, the Flower Array Sutra and the Manifestation of the Tathagatha sutra.[1] The first two of these sutras have also survived individually in the original Sanskrit (while the rest of the Avatamsaka only survives in translation).[26]

Ten Stages Sutra

Main article: Ten Stages Sutra

The sutra is also well known for its detailed description of the course of the bodhisattva's practice through ten stages where the Ten Stages Sutra, or Daśabhūmika Sūtra (▯▯▯, Wylie: 'phags pa sa bcu pa'i mdo), is the name given to this chapter of the Avataṃsaka Sūtra. This sutra gives details on the ten stages (bhūmis) of development a bodhisattva must undergo to attain supreme enlightenment. The ten stages are also depicted in the Laṅkāvatāra Sūtra and the Śūraṅgama Sūtra. The sutra also touches on the subject of the development of the "aspiration for Enlightenment" (bodhicitta) to attain supreme buddhahood.

The Flower Array Sutra

Main article: Gandavyuha

Sudhana learning from one of the fifty-two teachers along his journey toward enlightenment. Sanskrit manuscript, 11-12th century.

The last chapter of the Avatamsaka circulates as a separate and important text known as the Gaṇḍavyūha Sutra (" flower-array", or "bouquet";[27] □□□□ ‘Entering the Dharma Realm’[28]). Considered the "climax" of the larger text,[29] this section details the pilgrimage of the layman Sudhana to various lands (worldly and supra-mundane) at the behest of the bodhisattva Mañjuśrī to find a spiritual friend who will instruct him in the ways of a bodhisattva. According to Luis Gomez, this sutra can also be "regarded as emblematic of the whole collection."[24]

Despite the former being at the end of the Avataṃsaka, the Gaṇḍavyūha and the Ten Stages are generally believed to be the oldest written chapters of the sutra.[30]

The Manifestation of the Tathagatha sutra

The Tathāgatotpattisaṃbhavasūtra (The Manifestation of the Tathagatha sutra), which corresponds to chapter 32 of the full Buddhāvataṃsaka translation of Buddhabhadra (Taisho Tripitaka no. 278), focuses on the nature of the Buddha (Tathāgata) and his activities. According to Imre Hamar, this sutra "is a precursor to the tathāgatagarbha theory, the idea of universal access to buddhahood, as it stresses that all living beings have the wisdom of the Buddha, but due to their defilements, they are not able to see it. The Buddha’s mission is to reveal this fact to living beings."[1]

A version of this text was also translated into Chinese by Dharmarakṣa in 292 CE as an independent sutra, the Fo shuo rulai xingxian jing (□□□□□□□; The Appearance of Tathāgata as Related by the Buddha; *Tathāgatotapattisaṃbhavanirdeśa).[1]

English translations

The first relatively complete English translation of the contents of the Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra was authored by the late Thomas Cleary and published by Shambhala Publications in 1984 as The Flower Ornament Scripture: A Translation of the Avatamsaka Sūtra.[31] Cleary's translation was actually only partially translated from Śikṣānanda's most complete and now standard Tang Dynasty edition. Cleary chose instead to translate fully a third of this scripture (the very long and detailed Chapter 26 and the immense 53-part Chapter 39) from the much later P.L. Vaidya Sanskrit editions, even though he claimed on page two of his introduction to have made his translation from the Śikṣānanda edition.[32] This is clearly not true, for Cleary's translations of Chapters 26 and 39 do not follow Śikṣānanda's Chinese at all, whereas they do follow the often very different P.L. Vaidya Sanskrit edition fairly closely from beginning to end.[32]

Bhiksu Dharmamitra has recently produced from Tripitaka Master Śikṣānanda's 699 ce Sanskrit-to-Chinese edition (T0279) the first and so far only complete English translation of any edition of the Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra. It is published by Kalavinka Press in three volumes (totaling 2,500 pages) as The Flower Adornment Sutra: An Annotated Translation of the Avataṃsaka Sutra with A Commentarial Synopsis of the Flower Adornment Sutra (October 1st, 2022 / ISBNS: Volume One - 9781935413356; Volume Two - 9781935413363; Volume Three - 9781935413370). (His complete translation of Chapter 39 which corresponds precisely to the Gaṇḍavyūha is contained in Volume Three of this work. It includes the traditionally appended conclusion to Chapter 39, "The Conduct and Vows of Samantabhadra" which was originally translated into Chinese in 798 ce by Tripitaka Master Prajñā).[32]

Kalavinka Press also published the Daśabhūmika Sūtra (corresponding to Chapter 26 of the Avataṃsaka Sūtra) as an independent text as: The Ten Grounds Sutra: The Daśabhūmika Sūtra: the Ten Highest Levels of Practice on the Bodhisattva's Path to Buddhahood (2019). This was translated by Bhikshu Dharmamitra from Tripitaka Master Kumārajīva’s circa 410 ce Sanskrit-to-Chinese translation of the Daśabhūmika Sūtra (T0286).

The publisher Bukkyo Dendo Kyokai (BDK) has finished editing and is currently (as of July, 2022) in the process of preparing for publication an unannotated multi-volume edition of Bhikshu Dharmamitra's Flower Adornment Sutra which also includes Bhikshu Dharmamitra's translation of the traditionally appended conclusion to Chapter 39, "The Conduct and Vows of Samantabhadra" originally translated by Tripitaka Master Prajñā.

Both the Gaṇḍavyūha and the Daśabhūmika (which together constitute approximately one third of the Avataṃsaka Sūtra) have been independently translated from the Tibetan version by Peter Alan Roberts along with 84000.co as:

The Ten Bhūmis Chapter from the Mahāvaipulya Sūtra “A Multitude of Buddhas” [33]
“The Stem Array” Chapter from the Mahāvaipulya Sūtra “A Multitude of Buddhas” [34]
These translations are freely available on the 84000 website.

The City of Ten Thousand Buddhas is also producing a translation of the Avataṃsaka Sūtra (which they title The Great Means Expansive Buddha Flower Adornment Sutra) along with a lengthy commentary by Venerable Hsuan Hua.[35] Currently over twenty volumes are available, and it is estimated that there may be 75-100 volumes in the complete edition.

The Buddhāvata□saka-nāma-mahāvaipulya-sūtra (The Mahāvaipulya Sūtra named "Buddhāvata□saka") is one of the most influential Mahāyāna sutras of East Asian Buddhism.[1] It is often referred to in short as the Avata□saka Sūtra.[1] In Classical Sanskrit, avata□sa, vata□sa and utta□sa (from stem ta□s, meaning "to decorate")[2] all mean garland, wreath, or any circular ornament, such as an earring;[3] suffix -ka often functions either as a diminutive or plural. Thus, the title may be rendered in English as A Garland of Buddhas, Buddha Ornaments, or Buddha's Fine Garland.[3] In Buddhist Hybrid Sanskrit, the term avata□saka means "a great number," "a multitude," or "a collection." This is matched by the Tibetan title of the sutra, which is A Multitude of Buddhas (Tibetan: sangs rgyas phal po che).[3]

Modern scholars consider the Buddhāvata□saka to be a compilation of numerous smaller sutras, many of which originally circulated independently and then were later brought together into the larger mature Buddhāvata□saka. Many of these independent Buddhāvata□saka sutras survive in Chinese translation.[1]

The text has been described by the translator Thomas Cleary "the most grandiose, the most comprehensive, and the most beautifully arrayed of the Buddhist scriptures."[4] The Buddhāvata□saka describes a cosmos of infinite realms upon realms filled with an immeasurable number of Buddhas. This sutra was especially influential in East Asian Buddhism.[5] The vision expressed in this work was the foundation for the creation of the Huayan school of Chinese Buddhism, which was characterized by a philosophy of interpenetration. The Huayan school is known as Hwaeom in Korea, Kegon in Japan and Hoa Nghiêm in Vietnam. The sutra is also influential in Chan Buddhism.[5]

Title

This work has been used in a variety of countries. Some major traditional titles include the following:

Sanskrit: Buddhāvata□saka-nāma-mahāvaipulya-sūtra, The Mahāvaipulya Sūtra named "Buddhāvata□saka". Vaipulya ("extensive") refers to key Mahayana sutras.[6] "Garland/wreath/adornment" refers to a manifestation of the beauty of Buddha's virtues[7] or his inspiring glory.[N.B. 1] The term avata□saka also means "a great number," "a multitude," or "a collection." This matches the content of the sutra, in which numerous Buddhas are depicted as manifestations of the cosmic Buddha Vairocana.[3]
Chinese: Dàfāngguǎng Fóhuāyán Jīng □□□□□□□, commonly known as the Huāyán Jīng (□□□), meaning "Flower-adorned (Splendid & Solemn) Sūtra." Vaipulya here is translated as "corrective and expansive", fāngguǎng (□□).[10] Huā (□) means at once "flower" (archaic; namely □) and "magnificence." Yán (□), short for zhuàngyán (□□), means "to decorate (so that it is solemn, dignified)."

Japanese: Daihōkō Butsu-kegon Kyō (□□□□□□□), usually known as the Kegon Kyō (□□□). This title is identical to Chinese above, just in Shinjitai characters.
Korean: □□□□□□□ Daebanggwang Bulhwaeom Gyeong or Hwaeom Gyeong (□□□), the Sino-Korean pronunciation of the Chinese name.
Vietnamese: Đ□i ph□□ng qu□ng Ph□t hoa nghiêm kinh, shortened to the Hoa nghiêm kinh, the Sino-Vietnamese pronunciation of the Chinese name.
Tibetan: □□□□□□□□□□□□□, Wylie: mdo phal po che, Standard Tibetan Do phelpoche
Tangut (romanized): Tha cha wa tha fa sho ldwi rye
According to a Dunhuang manuscript, this text was also known as the Bodhisattvapiṭaka Buddhāvata□saka Sūtra.[9]

History
The Buddhāvata□sakasūtra was written in stages, beginning from at least 500 years after the death of the Buddha. One source claims that it is "a very long text composed of a number of originally independent scriptures of diverse provenance, all of which were combined, probably in Central Asia, in the late third or the fourth century CE."[11] Japanese scholars such as Akira Hirakawa and Otake Susumu meanwhile argue that the Sanskrit original was compiled in India from sutras already in circulation which also bore the name "Buddhavatamsaka".[12]

The Ten Stages sutra (Daśabhūmika) and the Flower Array sutra (Ga□ḍavyūha) have both survived in Sanskrit. There are two other parts of the Avatamsaka which have survived in Sanskrit, the Bhadracaryāpra□idhāna (The Aspiration Prayer for Good Conduct), and the Anantabuddhakṣetragu□odbhāvana-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra (Cultivating the Qualities of Infinite Buddhafields).[13] Apart from these four texts and some fragments, the rest of the sutra only survives in Chinese and Tibetan translations.[14]

Two full Chinese translations of the Buddhāvata□sakasūtra were made. Fragmentary translation probably began in the 2nd century CE, and the famous Ten Stages Sutra, often treated as an individual scripture, was first translated in the 3rd century. The first complete Chinese version was translated by Buddhabhadra around 420 in 60 scrolls with 34 chapters,[15] and the second by Śikṣānanda, assisted by Bodhiruci[16] around 699 in 80 scrolls with 40 chapters.[17][18] There is also a translation of the Ga□ḍavyūha section by Prajñā around 798. The second translation includes more sutras than the first, and the Tibetan translation, which is still later, includes many differences with the 80 scrolls version. Scholars conclude that sutras were being added to the collection.

The single extant Tibetan version was translated from the original Sanskrit by Jinamitra et al. at the end of ninth century.[19]

According to Paramārtha, a 6th-century monk from Ujjain in central India, the Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra is also called the "Bodhisattva Piṭaka."[9] In his translation of the Mahāyānasaṃgrahabhāṣya, there is a reference to the Bodhisattva Piṭaka, which Paramārtha notes is the same as the Avataṃsaka Sūtra in 100,000 lines.[9] Identification of the Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra as a "Bodhisattva Piṭaka" was also recorded in the colophon of a Chinese manuscript at the Mogao Caves: "Explication of the Ten Stages, entitled Creator of the Wisdom of an Omniscient Being by Degrees, a chapter of the Mahāyāna sūtra Bodhisattvapiṭaka Buddhāvataṃsaka, has ended."[9]

Overview

Illustration of the Avatamsaka Sutra at Songgwangsa in Suncheon, Korea. Joseon dynasty, 1644.
The sutra, among the longest Buddhist sutras, is a compilation of disparate texts on various topics such as the Bodhisattva path, the interpenetration of phenomena (dharmas), the omnipresence of Buddhahood, the miraculous powers of the Buddhas and bodhisattvas, the visionary powers of meditation, and the equality of things in emptiness.[20][21]

According to Paul Demiéville, the Buddhāvataṃsaka collection is "characterized by overflowing visionary images, which multiply everything to infinity, by a type of monadology that teaches the interpenetration of the one whole and the particularized many, of spirit and matter" and by "the notion of a gradual progress towards liberation through successive stages and an obsessive preference for images of light and radiance."[22] Likewise, Alan Fox has described the sutra's worldview as "fractal", "holographic", and "psychedelic".[23]

Holistic cosmos

The East Asian Buddhist view of the text is that it expresses the infinite universe as seen by a Buddha (the Dharmadhatu), who sees all phenomena as empty and thus infinitely interpenetrating, from the point of view of enlightenment.[22] This interpenetration is described in the Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra as the perception "that the fields full of assemblies, the beings and aeons which are as many as all the dust particles, are all present in every particle of dust."[24] Thus, a Buddha's view of reality is also said to be "inconceivable; no sentient being can fathom it".[24]

The following passage from the Buddhāvataṃsaka describes this holistic idea of universal interpenetration or interfusion which sees the total sum of all things as being contained in each individual phenomena:

Children of the Buddha, just as if there was a great sūtra, as extensive as the great universe, in which are written down all phenomena in the great universe. That is to say, in it is written about the phenomena in the great enclosing iron mountains, as extensively as the great enclosing iron mountains; it is written about the phenomena on earth, as extensively as the earth; it is written about the phenomena in the medium universe, as extensively as the medium universe; it is written about the phenomena in the small universe, as extensively as the small universe. In the same vein, all phenomena – be they of the four continents, or the great oceans, Sumeru mountains, the palaces of the gods in the heavens of the realm of desire, the palaces in the realm of form, and the palaces of the formless realm – are written down to an equal length. Even though this sūtra is as extensive as the great universe, it can be fully comprised within a single particle of dust. As it is with one particle, so it is with all particles of dust.[25]

This idea would later become central in East Asian Buddhist traditions like the Huayan school and Zen.

Mind-only and emptiness

Paul Williams notes that the sutra contains both the "mind-only" (cittamatra, Yogacara) teachings and the emptiness teachings (associated with Prajñaparamita and Madhyamaka). The sutra thus teaches that all things are empty of inherent existence and also speaks of "pure untainted awareness or consciousness (amala-citta) as the ground of all phenomena".[26]

Teachings about emptiness and mind-only can be found throughout the sutra, especially in chapters 10, 16, and 22 of the 60 fascicle version (T 278).[27] The sutra contains various statements affirming the mind-only teaching. For example, it states: "The triple world is only mind", and "Everything is created by the mind alone." It also affirms emptiness when it states: "The triple world is completely empty. That is the vision of the Buddhas;" and "all dharmas lack intrinsic nature; to understand the nature of dharmas like this is to see Vairocana."[27]

The power of the Buddhas

The Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra also highlights the visionary and mystical power of attaining the spiritual wisdom which sees the nature of the world:

> Endless action arises from the mind; from action arises the multifarious world. Having understood that the world's true nature is mind, you display bodies of your own in harmony with the world. Having realized that this world is like a dream, and that all Buddhas are like mere reflections, that all principles [dharma] are like an echo, you move unimpeded in the world (Trans in Gomez, 1967: lxxxi)[26]

As a result of their infinite power and omnipotence, Buddhas have the magical ability to create and manifest infinite number of forms all over the universe, and they do this effortlessly and without any calculation, through an infinite number of skillful means (upaya), out of great compassion for all beings.[28] As the sutra states:

In all atoms of all lands, Buddha enters, each and every one,
Producing miracle displays for sentient beings:
Such is the way of Vairocana....
The techniques of the Buddhas are inconceivable,
All appearing in accord with beings' minds....
In each atom the Buddhas of all times
Appear, according to inclinations;
While their essential nature neither comes nor goes,
By their vow power they pervade the worlds. (Cleary 1984–7: I, Bk 4)

Vairocana Buddha

The sutra also discusses how there are an immeasurable number of Buddhas and their buddha-fields which are said to be infinite, representing a vast cosmic view of reality. One key Buddha in this sutra is the Buddha Vairocana ("Radiance" or "The Illuminator"). Vairocana is a supreme cosmic Buddha who is the source of light and enlightenment of the 'Lotus universe', and who is said to contain all world systems within his entire cosmic body.[22]

The Avatamsaka sutra also states that the wisdom of the Buddha (the Tathagata) is present everywhere in the universe, indeed, it is present within every living being. Thus, the sutra states (in chapter 32, Manifestation of the Tathagata):

Son of Buddha, the wisdom of Tathagata is present everywhere. Why? Son of Buddha, in the class of living beings there is no place where the wisdom of Tathagata is not present. Why is it that? The wisdom of Tathagata is not established due to grasping the discrimination/consciousness, because the omniscient wisdom, the self-existent wisdom and the non-obstructed wisdom perfectly appear in total disconnection with discrimination.[29]

According to Paul Williams, the Buddha "is said or implied at various places in this vast and heterogeneous sutra to be the universe itself, to be the same as 'absence of intrinsic existence' or emptiness, and to be the Buddha's all-pervading omniscient awareness."[28] The very body of Vairocana is also seen as a reflection of the whole universe:

The body of [Vairocana] Buddha is inconceivable. In his body are all sorts of lands of sentient beings. Even in a single pore are countless, immeasurable vast oceans.[30]

Also, for the Buddhāvataṃsakasūtra, the historical Buddha Sakyamuni is simply a magical emanation of the cosmic Buddha Vairocana.[28]

Bodhisattva stages

The point of all the skillful teachings of the Buddha is to lead all living beings through the bodhisattva stages (Bhūmis) and to final Buddhahood. These stages of spiritual attainment are also widely discussed in various parts of the sutra (book 15, book 26).[22] Indeed, according to a detailed study of the sutra by Itō Zuiei, some of the most important teachings in the sutra are related to the bodhisattva path, its primary cause (bodhicitta) and bodhisattva activity (bodhisattva-caryā).[25] The Daśabhūmika Sūtra chapter describes ten bhūmis in detail.

Sutra overview

Luis O. Gómez notes that there is an underlying order to the Avatamsaka collection. The discourses in the sutra version with thirty nine books (or chapters) are delivered to eight different audiences or "assemblies" in seven locations such as Bodh Gaya and Tusita Heaven.[31] Each "assembly" includes various locales, doctrinal topics and characters.

The following list of assemblies is based on the exegesis of the Chinese Huayan school. In Huayan commentaries, the main "assemblies" which the collection is traditionally divided into are:[31][32][33]

1. The Bodhimaṇḍa (Books 1–6)

This assembly of bodhisattvas and other beings is gathered at the Bodhimaṇḍa (the seat of awakening under the bodhi tree in Bodh Gaya, Magadha), where the Buddha is seated. It is depicted as both the historical place as well as a transcendent palace filled with multicolored jewels and lights.[34] In these chapters, various bodhisattvas, including Samantabhadra, and the Buddha, discuss the nature of reality, the infinity of the universe, how Buddhahood is omnipresent throughout the universe (which is really one vast Buddhafield) and how bodhisattvas fill the countless worlds in the universe.[35] Chapter six discusses the Buddha Vairocana, his vow to reach Buddhahood long ago, and his path of practice.[36]

2. The Hall of Universal Light (Books 7–12)

Indian statue of bodhisattva Mañjuśrī, holding the sword of wisdom (which symbolizes prajñaparamita).
This assembly is located in the "Hall of Universal Light", a grand palace which is coextensive with the Bodhimaṇḍa.[37] In this set of books, the bodhisattva Mañjuśrī arrives, and empowered by the Buddha's power, gives various teachings on the path.[37] Mañjuśrī teaches on the four noble truths and the Buddha sends a light from his feet that illuminates the ten directions (symbolizing the all-pervading quality of the Buddha's wisdom).[38] Mañjuśrī then gives further teachings on bodhisattvas, and on pure conduct.[39] The 11th chapter is a popular text, widely known as the "pure practices chapter".

In chapter 12, the bodhisattva Bhadraśrī also teaches the Bodhisattva Path, discussing bodhicitta, faith, and merit, and recites a set of verses which were seen as a dharani in India, the Dharani of the Jewelled Comet (Ratnolkadhāraṇī).[40]

3. Indra's Palace (Books 13–18)

Without leaving his seat at the bodhi tree, the Buddha ascends to Indra's (Sakra) palace in Trāyastriṃśa Heaven at the summit of Mount Sumeru and he is praised by Sakra in verse. Many bodhisattvas arrive from other realms and recite verses on the nature of reality, praising the Buddha and bodhisattvas.[41]

In book 15, a bodhisattva named Dharmamati teaches on how the bodhisattva path progresses through ten abodes (viharas): (1) Awakening the Aspiration to Enlightenment; (2) Preparing the Ground; (3) Cultivating the Practices; (4) Noble Birth (i.e. into the family of the buddhas); (5) Perfection of Skilful Means; (6) Rectification of the Mind; (7) Nonregression; (8) Childlike Simplicity; (9) Crown Prince of the Dharma; and (10) Consecration.[42] Dharmamati then teaches on spiritual conduct and the importance of analytical inquiry for beginners on the path (book 16).[43] In book 17, Dharmamati teaches about the arousing of the mind of awakening (bodhicittotpāda) and how its merit is greater than any kind of act of worship, no matter how vast.[44] In book 18, Dharmamati discusses the main practices of bodhisattvas: heedfulness (apramāda), the perfections (pāramitās), the ten "inexhaustible treasuries" and others.[45]

4. Yama's Palace (Books 19–22)

The Buddha ascends to Yama's palace (Yama is the god of death), is welcomed with verses of praise. Ten more bodhisattvas arrive and sing verses on the nature of reality, emptiness and the mind.[46] These verses also discuss how the world is a mental creation, it includes the famous simile which compares the mind to a painter and the world to a painting.[47]
